5th December 2025

What we've been learning recently

English – In English, we have now completed our final polished pieces for our journalistic writing unit based on our class novel Holes. The children have produced some fantastic work, successfully incorporating all the required features, including passive and active voice, speech, and quotations.

Maths – In maths, we have been tackling a new concept: ratio. The children have embraced this challenge with enthusiasm and are already becoming real experts. They have also enjoyed exploring how ratios appear in real life - from mixing paints and recipes to comparing ingredients.

Wider Curriculum – In our wider curriculum, we have continued to explore all things electricity. The children have been using real equipment to test circuits and investigate how outputs, voltage, and current work. Their hands-on experiments have really helped deepen their understanding of these key concepts.

Over the next two weeks, we will be writing biographies based on characters from Holes, continuing to deepen and strengthen our understanding of ratio, and creating traffic lights in science as part of our work on electricity. We will also be making some festive decorations for the Winter Fayre.
